Understanding Action and Linking Verbs

Grasping the difference between action and linking verbs is fundamental for mastering English grammar. Action verbs describe what the subject of a sentence is doing, whether physically or mentally. Examples include “run,” “think,” and “write.” These verbs convey dynamic activities or processes. In contrast, linking verbs do not show action. Instead, they connect the subject to a subject complement that describes or identifies it, such as “is,” “seem,” or “become.” Recognizing these distinctions aids students in constructing clear, meaningful sentences and improves their overall language comprehension.

Definition and Characteristics of Action Verbs

Action verbs represent activities or states of being that the subject performs. They can be either transitive, requiring an object, or intransitive, not requiring one. For example, “She writes a letter” uses “writes” as a transitive action verb, whereas “He sleeps” contains an intransitive action verb. These verbs are central to expressing events, processes, or physical movements in sentences.

Definition and Characteristics of Linking Verbs

Linking verbs serve as connectors between the subject and additional information that describes or renames it. Common linking verbs include forms of “to be” (am, is, are, was, were), sensory verbs like “feel” or “look,” and verbs such as “become” or “seem.” Unlike action verbs, linking verbs do not show physical or mental action but instead link the subject to a predicate adjective or noun, providing essential details about the subject.
