Awesome Hands-On Activities for Teaching Literary Elements by Susan Van Zile

Literary elements are the foundational components that make up a story, poem, or any piece of literature. Understanding these elements is crucial for students as they navigate through their literary studies. Educator Susan Van Zile has developed a variety of hands-on activities that engage students and enhance their comprehension of literary elements such as plot, character, setting, theme, and point of view. This article will explore these innovative activities, providing teachers with practical strategies to bring literature to life in the classroom.

Understanding Literary Elements

Before diving into hands-on activities, it's essential to define the key literary elements that students should grasp:

1. Plot

Plot refers to the sequence of events that make up a story. It typically includes the exposition, rising action, climax, falling action, and resolution.

2. Character

Characters are the individuals that populate a story. They can be protagonists, antagonists, or supporting characters, each with their own motivations and development.

3. Setting

Setting encompasses the time and place in which a story unfolds. It creates the backdrop for the narrative and can influence the mood and actions of the characters.

4. Theme

Theme is the central idea or underlying message of a literary work. It often reflects broader human experiences or societal issues.

5. Point of View

Point of view determines the perspective from which the story is told. It can be first-person, second-person, or third-person, shaping the reader's connection to the narrative.

Hands-On Activities for Teaching Literary Elements

Here are some engaging, hands-on activities that Susan Van Zile recommends for teaching these crucial literary elements:

1. Plot Diagram Creation

A plot diagram is a visual representation of the plot structure. To create this activity:

- Materials Needed: Large poster paper, markers, and sticky notes.
- Instructions:
 1. Select a short story or novel that the class has read.
 2. Divide students into small groups and assign each group a different part of the plot (exposition, rising action, climax, falling action, resolution).
 3. Each group will write their assigned plot section on a sticky note, including key events or turning points.
 4. Groups will then collaborate to arrange their sticky notes on the poster paper to create a complete plot diagram.
 5. Have each group present their section to the class, fostering discussion about how each part contributes to the overall story.

2. Character Role Play

This activity encourages students to embody characters and deepen their understanding of character development.

- Materials Needed: Character profiles, costumes or props (optional).
- Instructions:
 1. Assign or have students choose a character from a book being studied.
 2. Students will create a character profile that includes the character's background, motivations, and relationships with other characters.
 3. In groups, students will act out a scene from the book, focusing on their character's perspective and motivations.
 4. After the performance, engage the class in a discussion about how the character's actions drive the plot and relate to the theme.

3. Setting Diorama Project

Creating a diorama helps students visualize and understand the significance of the setting in a story.

- Materials Needed: Shoeboxes, construction paper, art supplies, and other craft materials.
- Instructions:
 1. Have students select a pivotal scene from the literature being studied and identify its setting.
 2. Using the shoebox, students will create a diorama that represents the time and place of the scene.
 3. Students will write a brief description of the chosen setting, explaining how it influences the mood and actions of the characters.
 4. Set up a gallery walk where students can display their dioramas, allowing peers to explore and discuss each setting's impact on the story.

4. Theme Collage

A theme collage allows students to explore the broader messages in a text creatively.

- Materials Needed: Magazines, scissors, glue, and poster board.
- Instructions:
 1. After reading a piece of literature, have students identify the central themes.
 2. Students will search through magazines for images and words that represent the themes they've identified.
 3. Each student will create a collage on poster board that visually represents the theme.
 4. Host a "theme gallery" where students can present their collages and explain their choices, facilitating a discussion about different interpretations of the same theme.

5. Point of View Rewrite

This activity encourages students to examine how perspective affects the narrative.

- Materials Needed: Excerpts from a story written in different points of view.
- Instructions:
 1. Choose a scene from a book that can be interpreted from multiple perspectives (e.g., first-person vs. third-person).
 2. Have students rewrite the scene from a different character's point of view.
 3. Encourage them to consider how this change in perspective alters the reader's understanding of the events and characters.
 4. Students can share their rewrites in pairs or small groups, discussing the impact of point of view on the story.

Integrating Technology

In addition to traditional hands-on activities, integrating technology can also enhance the learning experience.

1. Digital Storytelling

Students can use digital tools to create their own stories, incorporating literary elements.

- Instructions:

1. Introduce students to digital storytelling platforms like Storybird or Adobe Spark.
2. Students can create their own narratives, focusing on incorporating literary elements such as plot, character, and setting.
3. After completing their stories, students can share them with the class or upload them to a class website for peer feedback.

2. Interactive Literature Circles

Using online platforms, students can participate in literature circles that allow for dynamic discussions about literary elements.

- Instructions:

1. Divide students into small groups and assign each group a different book or story.
2. Using platforms like Padlet or Google Classroom, students can post their thoughts on literary elements as they read.
3. Each week, groups can meet virtually to discuss their findings, allowing for a rich exchange of ideas.

Conclusion

Teaching literary elements through hands-on activities can make literature more accessible and engaging for students. Susan Van Zile's innovative approaches not only foster a deeper understanding of these elements but also encourage creativity, collaboration, and critical thinking. By incorporating activities like plot diagrams, character role play, setting dioramas, theme collages, and point of view rewrites, educators can create a dynamic learning environment where students can explore and appreciate the richness of literature. Additionally, the integration of technology can further enhance these experiences, preparing students for a world where digital literacy is essential. With these strategies, teachers can inspire a love for literature that lasts a lifetime.
