Origins and Early Matchups

The Cardinals vs Chargers history dates back to the early years of the NFL and AFL, with initial meetings occurring when the Chargers were part of the American Football League before the AFL-NFL merger in 1970. The Arizona Cardinals, originally based in Chicago and later St. Louis before settling in Arizona, have a long-standing franchise history. Meanwhile, the Chargers began as the Los Angeles Chargers in 1960, quickly moving to San Diego. Early matchups between these teams were infrequent due to being in different conferences, but their meetings set the foundation for a competitive dynamic.

First Encounters

The first official game between the Cardinals and Chargers took place in the 1960s, shortly after the Chargers' inception. These initial contests were marked by defensive struggles and highlighted the evolving styles of play in professional football. The Chargers' potent offense often clashed with the Cardinals' resilient defense, making each game unpredictable and exciting for fans.

Impact of AFL-NFL Merger

The 1970 merger integrated the AFL and NFL, placing the Cardinals and Chargers in the same league but different divisions. This shift increased the frequency of their meetings in the regular season and set the stage for more significant competitions. The merger also aligned the teams under the growing national spotlight, enhancing the importance of their games within the NFL schedule.
